❖ A MESSAGE FROM THE PASTOR

Behold the Prince of Peace

Having just bade farewell to 2025 and now beginning our journey into 2026, I suspect that many of us are hoping for a more peaceful new year than the one we have left behind. Our faith has much to contribute to the spreading of peace in our world.

For a little historical context—one that touches even our own history at St. Paul’s—Pope Pius IX, who reigned in the mid-1800s, wrote a document aimed at fostering peace among the Irish people. He explicitly linked the creation of peace with addressing the horrendous social conditions caused by the Great Famine, when the potato crops failed. Later, Pope Leo XIII, in his foundational document of Catholic social teaching, Rerum Novarum, connected peace with the qualities of a society that is just.

Those of us who have been committed to the Church’s social teaching may be more familiar with what has been said since the 1960s. When I was in my teenage years, there were many people deeply committed to a renewed vision of our shared life. It is surely distressing to many today to see more of the world sliding into a closed and defensive posture. In such a climate, the call for peace can begin to feel like little more than a wish in the face of an increasingly acrimonious world.

I wonder whether, in this age of a surplus of information, what we truly need are practical demonstrations of what it means to live in peace. Naturally, we think first of individual acts of kindness and of our own need for ongoing conversion—conversion that allows virtues to shine and diminishes the rougher edges of ourselves. At heart, we all want to be “at home” and at peace.

When we build and support that kind of environment in our communities, especially when it makes us more open rather than more fearful, we begin to spread peace in very real ways.

For several years, I was responsible for coordinating our Catholic presence to prisoners in provincial institutions within our Archdiocese. I will readily admit that providing suitable chaplains was a challenge, and I often wished we could have done much more. Still, that experience taught me a great deal about how the Church regards those who have caused significant harm. While our instinct may be to recoil, Christians are clearly called to uphold a dignity and respect that make room for a new way of living to emerge. Even the word “penitentiary” reflects this conviction: it was coined out of the Church’s belief in the importance—and the possibility—of conversion and change. When we go to confession and receive a penance, the prayer or act issued to us is meant as an aid in our deeper conversion.

There is no doubt that the star which guided the Magi was a beacon of the Prince of Peace, who came not in grandeur, but in simplicity. As we seek, in our own ways, to manifest that same light, let us not underestimate what may seem too simple for the immense task of peacemaking. In 2026, may the world—and especially the part of it that we touch through our own lives—come to reflect the Prince of Peace more fully.

In Christ,

Fr. Bob
